During the following days an ammonial odor developed, the edges of the wound became swollen and irritated, and were covered with a yellowish-brown crust, and the interior of the wound was filled with exudation. Although the healing process was a pyretic and no danger threatened in that direction, Dr. Escher found it necessary to remove the aristol dressing and to substitute the typical iodoform dressing. With another patient, twelve years of age, on whom Dr. Escher had performed Pirogoffs amputation on account of caries of the tarsus, and where ordinarily he would have used the common iodoform dressing, aristol gauze was applied. In this instance also aristol had soon to be abandoned, owing to the foetid discharge from the wound. Very instructive are two operations performed by Dr. Escher, almost at the same time: 1. Extirpation of cancerous growth at the angle of the mouth, with resection of the carcinomatous lower jaw, and the other one a resection of the tongue, after the method of Billroth-Regnoli, with previous subligation of the two linguales. In the first instance aristol gauze was used as a tampon; abundant salivation and fetor ex are resulted, and as the aristol gauze did not adhere to the wound, Dr. Escher resorted to iodoform dressing. In the second case where iodoform dressing had been applied from the beginning, the healing process was a very favorable one. Although Aristol, in the form...
