Not illustrated. 1895 Excerpt: . . . in Gods name his protection, Chaucers story dates from the mythological age, we live in an age of realism. Miltons famous lines, No war, or battles sound Was heard the earth around; The idle spear and shield were high uphung; belongs not to our day. International jealousies bid fair to keep the condition of Armenia during the winter one of great suffering, and the position of the representatives from foreign courts in Turkey one of great embarrassment. But nothing seems more unaccountable than utterances like that of F. Hopkinson Smith, who through the secular papers has attempted to present the character of the Turk as one of beauty and humanity. A prominent Bostonian on being asked how he accounted for such an opinion from a man who had really spent several months in Turkey, answered, About on the same principle should I hear a man extol...
