Excerpt: .not circulate he will not sell ; an answer that revealed to me the bastions of the fortresses I had undertaken in rash haste to storm. But something had to be done, and on leaving Mr. Tinsley s office I looked round for a hansom and drove to the library in Oxford Street absorbed in the fear that Mr. Mudie might refuse to see me. I have called to see Mr. Mudie. The attendant at the counter said he would take up my name, and I paced the waiting-room till an almost lifeless, thick-set, middle-aged man entered. I knew that I should make no impression on him, but we were face to face, and I began to speak all I could remember of Kola s Roman Experimental, to which he gave a stupid, almost listless ear. I will wreck this big house of yours, Mr. Mudie! I cried; and seeing me look round the room, and judging me) to be measuring the strength of the architecture, a faint smile lighted up his face for a moment, and I began to ask myself if other authors had threatened him before. My next novel will be issued at a popular price, I cried; I will appeal to the public. To which he answered that popular prices would suit his business better than the conventional three-volume novel, price thirty-one-and-six; and I left his emporium to start a few days afterwards for Ireland to write A Mummer s...
