See how wretched the poor donkey looks, standing unsheltered out in the keen wind and cold rain, and think how he must suffer, after a hard day s work, in having to pass the long night in a cold, damp hovel, or out-house. He seems to have a great fear of getting his feet wet--fitted as they are for treading the dry hot plains of the south SHOULD BE HUMOURED. 87--and you may notice how the donkey will try to turn aside from every pool and puddle in the road, even if he has a heavy load on his back. Let us humour our patient, shaggy friend, and allow him to pick his own way in the sloppy lane; and in all his harmless likes and dislikes let us do as we would be done by to our fellow-labourer, the ass,...
